BUFFALO BILL'S CUBANS.

Carries a Fighting Company With His Wild West Show.

Progression is the one thing above all on that counts in the show business, and it is the unlimited amount of energy and perserverance of which Col. William Cody is master, as much as anything else, that has made his en-tertainment the most famous of its kind in the world. Expense or difficulty do not seem to stand in the way of his projects, and the result is that his performance always contains a number of altractions to be seen in no other combination in the world. Col. Cody is especially anxious to keep his enterprime abreast of the times, and to that end keeps a sharp lookout on topics of interest and, when possible, takes active means to bring them before the feeling that was beginning to be mani-fested over the Cuban question and bindy calculated that the weaks and se of the patriotic army would soon be engressing the attention of Ameri-cius. At a great expense and with nucli personal labor, he secured a numper of wounded veterans of the war of independence, and formed them into a company practically unequaled for its utility and its history. All of the members of the troop are expert horse-men and line shots, skilled in scout work and anxious to return to the com-bat with the enemies of their common country. They are men who have proved their bravery under fire and are on record in the offices of the Cuban Junta for acts of conspicuous daring.

Col. Cody says that their appearance and conduct is a revelation. Their features are strong but handsome and clear-cut, their bodies muscular and ac-tive and their entire bearing that of cool curage and culm determination. ## Goodwin as Bob Acres

The largest audience of the week was present last night at the New National Theatre to witness Nat C. Goodwin's production of Sheridan's greatest comedy, "The Rivais" Despite adverse criticism and discouragement Mr. Goodwin has continued this piece on his bills, confident in his final success and in the favor with which his interpretation has been re-ceived by the public. His work as Bob Arres has night was not materially dif-ferent from that of his other engagements here. It is a skilled and careful hit acting more the result of studious worthan of positive genius. The Bessemer process of making steel as created a revolution in the railway service almost equal to that which enstied from the Invention of the locomotive engine. This process was long held by Great Britain, resulting in an excess of production above that of all other countries. That first place is now lost, first on account of the approximate exhaustion of the ores near Billino in Spain. which are the only ores near British fur-taces suitable for this product; and second, on account of the rapidly increas-ing cost of mining the types of bitumi-nous cosis which can be converted into coke. The English mines are now being worked at a depth of over 2,000 feet, the coal lying in horizontal veins from two to three feet thick, where the work must be done at a temperature exceeding 100 de-grees F. On the other hand, the rapid development of high-grade ores suitable for the production of Bessemer metal, and the opening of very extensive mines of the best cooking coal lying in a region above the necessity of draininge, and ca-pable of being worked at high wages and yet at the lowest possible cost, has transferred what may be called the do-minion of iron and steel from Europe to this country. Hence it happened that the portentous event of this decade is the future and probable permanent control of the production of iron and steel by into country.
